New Database

The Law Library now subscribes to Blue J Legal's Employment Foresight, an AI-enabled tool that helps users address a variety of legal issues related to employment such as "reasonable notice, employee drug testing, worker classification, constructive dismissal, managerial exemption to overtime, and cause for dismissal." Librarians will receive training next week to learn how we can best assist faculty and students researching in this area.

Legal Research Instruction for Small Groups

In support of our 1Ls writing their first small group assignments, John Bolan, Head of Instructional Services, is available come into your classroom to provide legal research training. The customized sessions will help students formulate sound research strategies, and highlight the most relevant resources/research tools needed to successfully complete their assignments.

Quercus to replace Blackboard as the University's Learning Management Engine (LME)

Message from the Centre for Teaching Support & Innovation (CTSI):

Curious about U of T's new LME?

As a U of T instructor, you have access to an online 'sandbox' to play with new features. This is an opportunity to explore and become familiar with all the tools that the new LME has to offer. More information about the new LME project can be found at toolboxrenewal.utoronto.ca. CTSI welcomes your feedback.

Happy New Year

Journal Production Services

Thinking of moving your law review or journal to an Open Access format?

JPS is a journal hosting service provided by the University of Toronto Libraries. Based on Open Journal Systems, this journal management and publishing platform assists with every stage of the refereed publishing process, from submissions through online publication.
