Instructional Support

Small Group Research Sessions

We provide legal research training for your Small Group courses, ideally timed to align with the 1L students' written assignments. The customized sessions teach students how to formulate sound research strategies and highlight the most relevant resources/research tools needed to successfully complete research assignments. If you would like to book a research session for your students, please contact john.bolan@utoronto.ca

On-Demand RAs

Short-term Research Projects

A pool of law student research assistants is available to assist faculty with short-term research projects throughout the academic year. RAs work directly with the faculty member to work out the scope of the research and to communicate the results of their research; the Reference & Research Librarian is available to provide guidance and consultations. The students are paid from the individual faculty member's research funds. If you would like to hire a Research Assistant, please contact alexia.loumankis@utoronto.ca

Please see our Services for Faculty page for a list of our other offerings.

Did you know HeinOnline has Canadian legislation?

Legal researchers often search HeinOnline for legal journal articles, but did you know that you can also find digitized pre-confederation and historical Canadian and provincial statutes on the platform?

On the homepage of HeinOnline, access our Canadian legislation from the top left link “Canadian Content” in the “Browse Databases by Category”.

Like using journal articles on HeinOnline, you can output full PDFs or extracts of each statute. You can also generate a permalink to a specific page which can be shared with other U of T researchers and students.

In addition to Canadian legislation, our HeinOnline subscription includes access to legislation from United States, Australia, and the United Kingdom (Statutes of the Realm).

If paper is your preferred format, you can still find our print Canadian and provincial legislation on the main floor of our library!
